WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

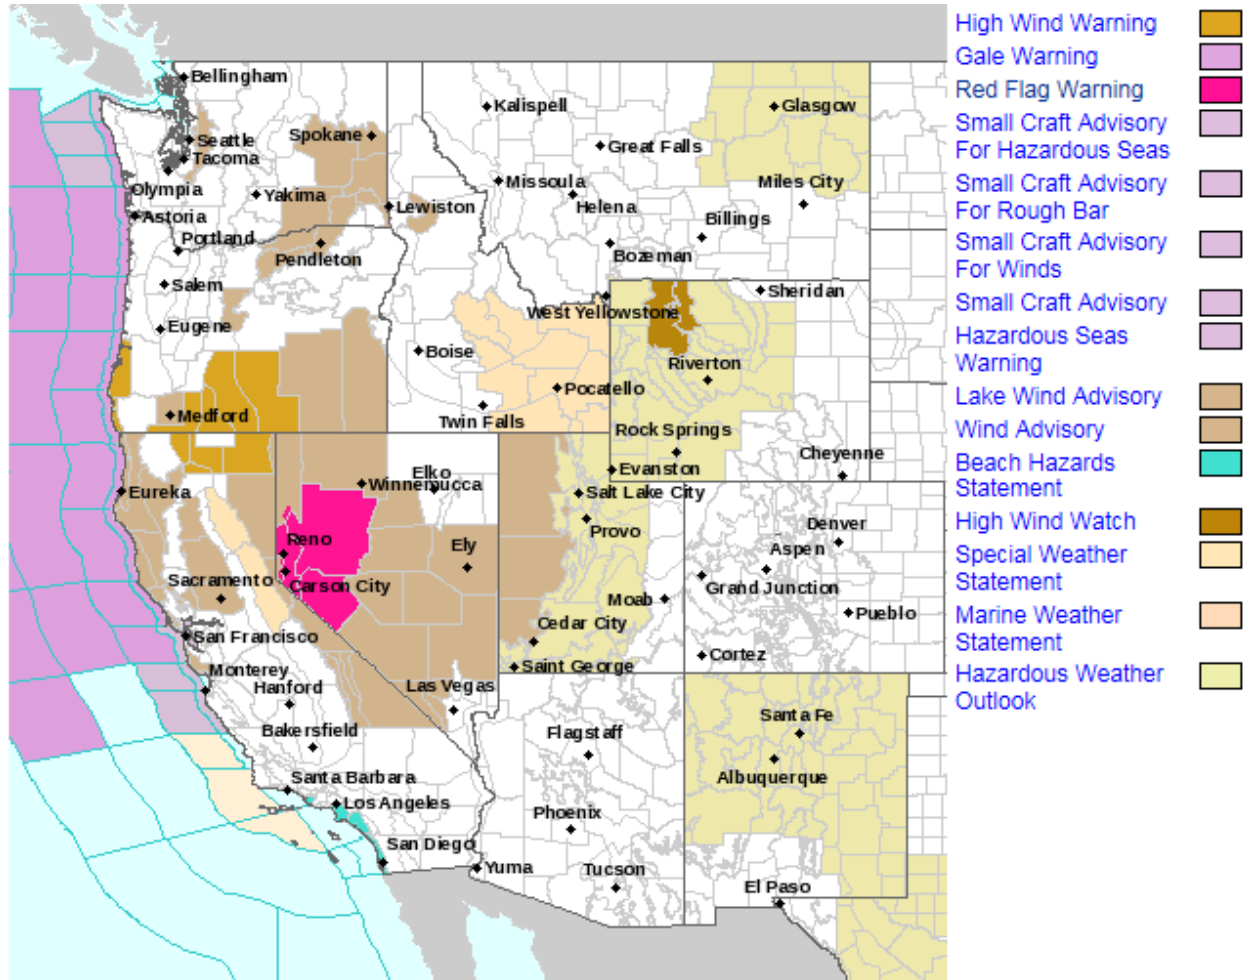

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA:

The storm track will continue to bring rain and mountain snow to the Northern California area once or twice per week through early November. Between storm systems conditions will be partly cloudy, mild, humid, and occasionally breezy. The next system to move through the Northern California will arrive at the coast early Saturday and exit eastern areas by early Sunday. Snow levels will start out near 8000 feet and fall to 5000 feet in the north and 6000 feet in the south as the main low pressure trough moves overhead. Winds will gust to 25-35 mph out of the S-SW ahead of the main front and rain, and become SW-W with gusts 20-25 mph once the front passes on Saturday. Rainfall from this system will be 1-3 inches in far Northwest California and 0.25-1.00 inches elsewhere, except areas in the extreme eastern and southern portion of the Northern California area where only a trace to 0.10 inches is expected. A brief period of warmer and drier weather is expected Sunday and Monday as high pressure passes overhead. The next system will reach far Northwest California Tuesday and gradually spread east and south, reaching most areas north of I-80 on Wednesday and areas to the south on Thursday.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA:

Strong high pressure over the Desert Southwest will cause temperatures to remain around 10 degrees above normal today, with upper 60s and 70s in the mountains and 80s to low 90s in the valleys. Minimum humidity will be mainly in the single digits and teens away from the coastal areas today. A Pacific trough moving into the West Coast will bring a significant cooling trend and much higher humidity to the region this weekend. Scattered showers with less than a quarter inch of rainfall will occur from a Monterey/Fresno County line northward Saturday. South to west winds of 15 to 25 mph with gusts to 40 mph will surface across the mountain ridges and desert passes Saturday afternoon through Sunday afternoon. The marine layer will deepen greatly this weekend, with morning low clouds and fog making it over the lower coastal mountain slopes by Sunday morning. A ridge of high pressure will build into the region from the south bringing a warming and drying trend to the region Monday through the middle of next week. Winds will be light Monday through the middle of next week.
